If you think you know a lot about Florida's state flag, well then listen to this. Florida didn't always have a red X on it, in fact it used to just be a white flag with the seal in the middle! People said that the plain white flag looked like a plain white surrender hanging from a pole. Historians debate whether the red X was meant to call to mind a similar design on either the confederate flag or the flag of the spanish empire that used to rule Florida. I hope you learned something new about Florida's state flag!
